1/16/14		[REDACTED] visited with SGS and said he felt he was unfairly asked to leave library in Dec., 2013 because of his dress (wearing long black cloak representing his religious beliefs--Druidism) and that an officer told him to leave. Said that he was told he was staring at people and getting in their space. He denies this. He wants an apology
1/17 - 1/23/14		SGS contacted Dean Greenberg and followed up with University Police who provided information on police report of being called to Library by [REDACTED] (student employee; contact # then provided by Dean Greenberg) because of patron staring and making patrons nervous. SGS talked with officer who explained that he never told [REDACTED] that he had to leave, but only that he needed to stop making people uncomfortable, or he would need to.

1/23/14		On 1/23/14, SGS called [REDACTED] who said she works from 8 to midnight. She said two students who worked in Wilson that night called her about [REDACTED] so she went down to talk to him face to face. There were several complaints from mostly girl students that a man was walking really close to them and stopping and staring at them intensely and making them uncomfortable. They reported he looked suspicious and he was walking very close to people. [REDACTED] said she went downstairs to make sure everyone was ok and then decided to call the university police. [REDACTED] says she only mentioned his cloak so that the police officer would know who to look for. It was not how he was dressed that was the issue. This occurred in Wilson. [REDACTED] said Mr. [REDACTED] was going in and out of Zoe's. Several students left the library because they felt uncomfortable with him. I feel bad that he would feel this is about how he was dressed. SGS followed up with Dean Greenberg who emphasized that Mr. [REDACTED] is always welcome in Library as long as he is not disturbing other patrons.
		SGS tried to follow up with Mr. [REDACTED] but was not successful reaching him.
